[redacted] At the time [redacted] drafted and sent the e-mail he knew it was wrong to threaten to kill anyone, including a United States Senator; however he still authored and sent the threat to Senator Boxer. [redacted] acknowledged during the few seconds he drafted and sent the e-mail he was angry with Senator Boxer, but he had no intentions to carry out the threat. [redacted] also recalled sending threatening e-mails to Senator Boxer sometime in the Spring of 2011. He could not recall the exact details; however, he recalled sending them from a [redacted]

[redacted] sent the most recent e-mail to Senator Boxer because he heard voices in his head that were telling him that Senator Boxer was "trying to seduce him to change his sex affiliation". [redacted] stated he has brief periods of "bursts of anger" that make him want to do things he never intends to carry out. When asked when the last time he heard voices in his head, [redacted] said it was a few seconds before he was approached by the interviewing agents, Task Force Officer and police officers. When asked what the voices were saying, [redacted] said the voices were saying something about Dover, Air Force Base, but he was unsure what the voices were suggesting, if anything.
